Proposal for the Georgia Trust for Historic Preservation J. Neel Reid Prize

A FIELD STUDY IN AMERICAN RESIDENTIAL ARCHITECTURE

KYLE D. TAYLOR

“Let us reacquaint ourselves with this champion of architecture, gardens and interior decoration...” - William R. Mitchell, Jr.

This travel study aims to further my education in traditional and classical architecture, with particular focus on residential architecture in America. Along with this focus, the sites on the itinerary also offer opportunities to explore the connections architecture holds with interior and landscape design. These are additional interests of mine that have only grown stronger throughout my academic and professional careers. My visits will be spent sketching, measuring, photographing as well as exploring the archives and rare books in some of the onsite libraries.

As a practitioner in Atlanta, Neel Reid’s body of work is more than familiar. I have studied his work while working to restore a Neel Reid original, but as is more often the case, using Mr. Reid as precedent for new construction and even in the design of a country clubhouse in my graduate thesis. Precedent is a large reason I have chosen the sites I have. Neel Reid’s understanding and use of precedent can be found from his travels and studies, but in order to properly understand and use his body of work as precedent, one must study the precedent’s precedent. By visiting American residential sites that potentially offered precedent for Reid’s residential projects, I aim to further the legacy of J. Neel Reid by working towards becoming a champion of design and continuing the practice of traditional and classical architecture in Atlanta and throughout the region.
